

June 8 - June 14, 2001

The MOPITT anomaly work is continuing. A teleconference was held with the company that built the cooler. All relevant information has been conveyed to them and they are now actively working with NASA on the issue.

At 03:56 Zulu on June 14, the MODIS instrument shut itself off over the South Atlantic Anomaly. An anomaly team is being formed to determine why this occurred. The instrument is stable and the temperature is being maintained by the survival heaters. An incident report is being developed.

All other spacecraft and instrument operations are normal. A Deep Space Calibration maneuver Program Review was successfully conducted on June 13.
